every once in awhile for the students.

"We're partnering with them, and trying to get multiple years of going with them, to get the student section better," said senior Trey Bottorff. He, along with seniors Gerrin Moore and Jay Williams, were responsible for organizing and getting this endeavor off of its feet.

For two weeks, student section shirts were sold for $15, but are now unavailable for purchase.

The purpose of the shirts is so students can rep them at games and around school; if they can't follow the weekly football theme, the shirt is the perfect alternative.

"It's something to center around," Moore said of the sponsorship. "Once people get there, then they realize what a great thing it is, so it's just bringing more attention to it so that more people can get out there and eventually realize how great of a thing we have here at Jeff."

Their main goal is to convince more students to attend football games. Moore hopes if they give students a satisfactory outlet to come to, then more will frequent the student section.

"I want to give students a reason to come to the game and enjoy themselves, and I feel that partnering with someone like that will allow us to get more things for our students in order to bring them to the games," Moore said. "And once you start getting kids to the games, then they can enjoy themselves, have fun and want to keep coming back."

of downtown Jeffersonville's newest restaurants, the student section is looking to make Friday night lights a bit more fun for everybody. Parlour is a new pizzeria located in downtown Jeff, near the base of the Big Four Walking Bridge.

In order for the student section to bear the pizzeria's name, The Devil's Parlour, the exchange was that in return, Parlour will provide discounts on pizza

Enthusiastic chants and shouts echo from the stands where Jeff High pride shines through, blindingly bright. The stadium lights add a spotlight on the field, which highlights the players running the field.

Jeff High's new student section, The Devil's Parlour, holler and laugh with one another when a touchdown, or an infallible pass, is made.

After teaming up with Parlour, one
